Polio Could Be Stopped Worldwide By Year's End, Says Gates Foundation On World Polio Day, health experts celebrated the “endgame” of polio eradication.

By Dominique Mosbergen

Thirty years ago, the polio virus was rampant in more than 120 countries, responsible for the paralysis of about 350,000 people each year. Today, there are only 12 documented cases of the disease in just two nations — and, according to the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, this once-prevalent illness may soon be wiped off the face of the planet.

Speaking at Rotary International’s World Polio Day event on Tuesday, which was co-hosted by the Gates Foundation, Dr. Jay Wenger, the director of the foundation’s polio eradication program, said humanity had successfully reached “the endgame of polio eradication.”

“We are closer than ever, and we’re optimistic that we can see the end of wild poliovirus disease by as early as this year or next,” Wenger said.

To mark World Polio Day, Rotary International and the Gates Foundation roped in WWE star John Cena to spread the word about polio eradication efforts.

Rotary and the Gates Foundation have both contributed enormously to the global fight to eradicate polio, which has centered primarily on the dissemination of safe and effective oral vaccines to even the most remote corners of the globe.

The Gates Foundation has invested almost $3 billion in this effort, a spokeswoman told CNBC. Rotary, which launched the world’s first global initiative to end polio in 1985, has contributed nearly $2 billion. With the support of governments and other organizations, the Gates Foundation and Rotary have helped vaccinate 2.5 billion children in 122 countries since the 1980s.

It’s an initiative that’s been hugely successful.

“We’ve gone from 40 cases an hour back in 1988 to just 40 cases in all of 2016,” Bill Gates, the co-founder of Microsoft, said in June. When India announced in 2014 that it was polio-free, Bill Gates wrote in a Hindustan Times op-ed that the country’s “success in eradicating polio is the greatest global health achievement I have ever witnessed.”

“India may be the hardest planet to vaccinate every child. The country has some of the most densely populated urban areas in the world making it a challenge to track children polio workers have immunised,” Gates said. “[But] India was up to the challenge with more than two million vaccinators reaching more than 170 million children with the vaccine.”

Today, the crippling and potentially fatal disease survives only in Afghanistan and Pakistan. Both nations have committed to fighting the virus.

A spokeswoman for the Gates Foundation told HuffPost that once the last case of polio is seen globally, the world will need to go three years without a single additional case before the virus can be declared truly eradicated. This means that global efforts must continue with vigilance to keep the virus at bay.

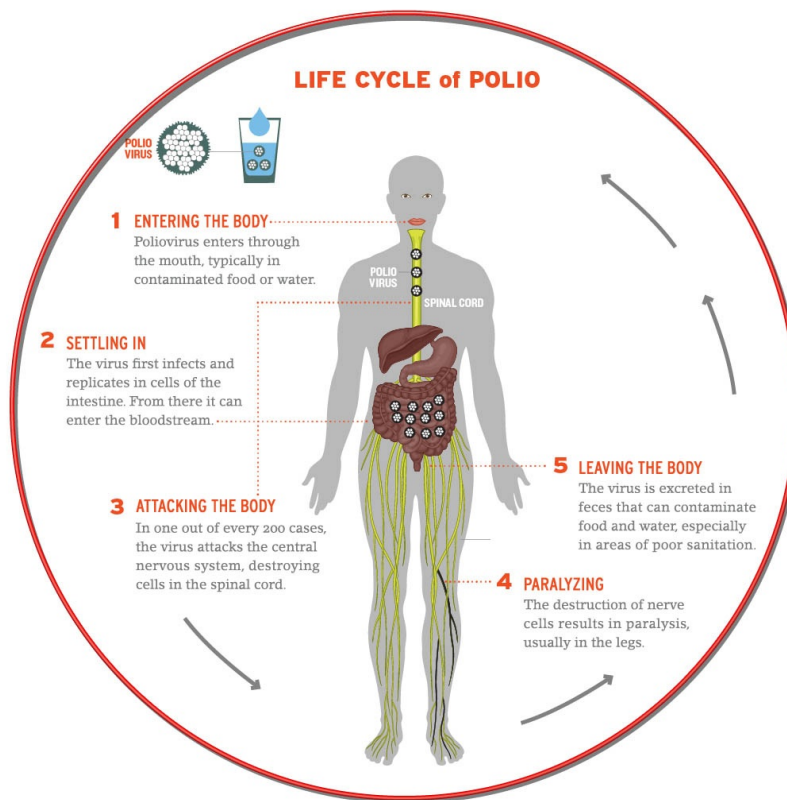

Upcoming Events

- Rotary park Veterans Day service Saturday 11 November. Charles and his Boy Scout troop are co-ordinating this year's event to honor veterans of all wars for their sacrifice for our country.
- Kelleher reported that he expects the dictionaries to arrive this week and he will be setting dates for handing them to the 3rd graders with school principals. All club members that plan to participate its time to collect your teams and advise Jim that you are ready to go.
- Xmas 4 Kids (Walmart) will be on Saturday, December 9th. Participating Rotarians will assemble at Walmart in Deptford (Cooper St. & Delsea Dr.) and shop with and for deserving children. Wanda & Gayle are coordinating this event. To be a participant you must sign up with the coordinators. The Breakfast Club members are joining us on this event.
- Xmas 4 Kids - GWCM - The Woodbury Rotary Club has partnered with the Greater Woodbury Cooperative Ministries, (GWCM) to provide winter coats to deserving children. Rotarians will be distributing winter coats at the GWCM food pantry on Tuesday and Thursday 9:30 a.m. – 11:00 a.m. from Tuesday after Thanksgiving (28 Nov) until Thursday before Christmas (21 Dec). The food pantry is located at the Woodbury Seventh-day Adventist Church (Evergreen and E. Barber Ave.). Charles is coordinating the scheduling. He plans to have two Rotarians staffing every day as food pantry is open.
- WRC Christmas party - December 12th - Members and guests are invited to bring wrapped gifts to be exchanged in our traditional program. Gifts are to cost $20.00 or less. We are again inviting the Woodbury High School Traveling Choir to brighten the season.
